

CAN I BE EVICTED FROM A HOTEL during the COVID-19 crisis in Louisiana?

Updated 4/1/2020

Can hotel staff put me out if I can't pay my hotel fee?

No. Only “appropriate lawful authority” may remove you, meaning a police officer or sheriff’s deputy. La. Revised Statute § 21:76. Note: you can access all the laws referenced in this document through Google.

Can the hotel put me out if I am living in a hotel long term and pay weekly?

Some hotels are set up for long term living, with kitchens, mail delivery, laundry, and other amenities. If you are renting a hotel room long term and paying weekly, you are a tenant and the hotel should go through the court eviction process to put you out. Right now the Governor suspended evictions statewide through April 13th (likely will be extended to April 30th), so you cannot legally be evicted.

If this argument is unsuccessful, see below.

Can the hotel put me out if I have only been at the hotel a few nights?

Even if the eviction laws don't apply to you, the hotel must complete several steps before they can call an officer to put you out. First, the hotel must have given you written notice of the agreed-upon departure date and checkout time when you registered. Second, the hotel must give you at least 1 hour's written or verbal notice that you must leave. La. Revised Statute § 21:75.

Third, the law says that the officer cannot evict you from a hotel during a “serious medical emergency,” so even if the hotel gave you proper notice, it is illegal to put you out during a public health emergency declared by the Governor. La. Revised Statute § 21:76.

What should I do if a hotel tries to evict me during the Covid-19 crisis?

Be sure there is an adult in your hotel room at all times so that the hotel cannot lock you out by deactivating your key card. You can also show the hotel manager or the police this document or the laws it references. You may also be able to access free legal assistance through Southeast Louisiana Legal Services' (SLLS) COVID-19 Hotline at 1-844-244-7871.
